At a Glance

Location

Set high on the Andean Plateau, the Atacama Desert is an ethereal wilderness shaped by altitude, silence and endless horizons. Tierra Atacama sits at 7,900ft (2,407m) above sea level, on the outskirts of the oasis town of San Pedro de Atacama and surrounded by nearly 50,000 square miles (80,000 sq km) of otherworldly terrain often likened to the moon. Framing the distance are the Andes and Domeyko mountain ranges, while the sacred Licancabur Volcano - rising 19,420ft (5,919m) - stands as a striking landmark visible from every corner of the lodge.

Getting Here

Tierra Atacama is situated on the edge of San Pedro de Atacama, a small village in the Atacama Desert in northern Chile. Regular two-hour flights operate between Santiago and Calama and the lodge offers complimentary road transfers from Calama Airport to the lodge, taking around one hour.

Climate

Chile's Atacama Desert is defined by dramatic contrasts. Days are typically warm, bright and cloudless, while nights bring a marked drop in temperature and refreshingly cool air. Rainfall is rare, though occasional showers can occur between January and April during the so-called Altiplano winter, when warm, moisture-laden air from the Amazon brings afternoon thunderstorms to the region.

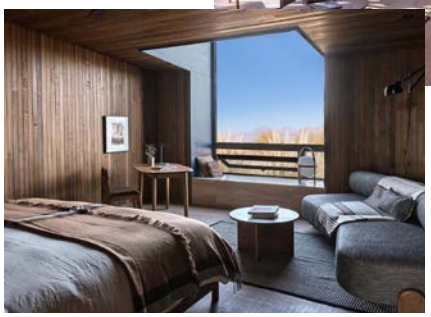

Season	Average daytime temp	Average overnight temp
Summer (December–February)	27-32°C (81-90°F)	10-15°C (50-59°F)
Autumn (March–May)	22-27°C (72-81°F)	2-8°C (36-46°F)
Winter (June–August)	16-22°C (61-72°F)	0- -2°C (32-38°F)
Spring (September–November)	16-20°C (61-68°F)	3-9°C (37-48°F)
